

TREKSTARS

THE ORIGINAL SERIES

SEASON ONE

Last updated 8/30/19

This website will eventually be a list of everyone who ever got a professional credit on Star Trek. It starts with the Original Series (TOS). Episodes are listed in order of production number (not broadcast order). Other Star Trek series, movies, animated episodes, books, records and possibly other related sources, will eventually be included, anything that has a name professionally attached to Star Trek. If you know details about any of the names listed here or dispute facts that are mentioned, or you have other names or details to add, please contact steve@stevlampen.com.

While volumes have been written about Shatner and Nimoy, and some of the other major stars, there is little or nothing about many of their Guest Stars and almost nothing about the writers, directors and other crew. The Casting Director (Joe D'Agosta) had an obvious intent, perhaps encouraged by Roddenberry, to include many veteran actors. There are many for whom their appearance in Star Trek would be one of their last acting appearances, people such as Elisha Cook Jr., Celia Lovsky or Ian Wolfe. These, and many others, had an extensive list of major credits in movies and television. (Elisha Cooke Jr. played across from Humphrey Bogart in “The Maltese Falcon”.) So this list is an attempt to make their previous accomplishments remembered by the Star Trek fan base and to honor their earlier accomplishments, as well as their Star Trek legacy. Where there are major on-line sources of information on any particular actor, links have been provided rather than copying the entire entry.

This list ends with a detailed table of all 79 original episodes which allow the casual user to see the relationship between these episodes from many different perspectives. If you see a name there that you do not know, find their name alphabetically in the list immediately below. Following that is a list of all the job titles, with the names of the people who performed those tasks in one or more of the original episodes. Science Fiction fans will be interested in the list of “writers” as many of them were seasoned, famous, science fiction writers long before (and long after) the original Star Trek.

Many credits include acronyms for organizations. These add credibility and stature to those who perform these duties. Here is a list of acronyms in the list below.

Ball, Lucille	While it is well known that Lucille Ball and her husband, Desi Arnaz, started Desilu Studios (the studio name is a contraction of their first names), it is rarely mentioned what a fan Lucy was of the original Star Trek format and Gene Roddenberry's idea in general. Without her encouragement, it is quite doubtful that Star Trek would ever have seen the light of day.

Butler, Robert Director TOS 16 The Menagerie Part 2

Butler was, in fact, the director of the original pilot The Cage. I assume he is given credit for only Part 2 of TOS 16 The Menagerie because he would have to be paid for two episodes if he was also listed as director of Part 1. The wrap-around portions, directed by Marc Daniels, listed him as director of Part 1.

Scotty's Finger

James Doohan was shot eight times on D-Day as he headed up the invasion of Juno Beach at Normandy for the Canadian forces, including losing a finger on his right hand. Most people are unaware of this loss. Sadly, this was “. friendly fire” and could have been avoided. I have included a few images from the original series where Scotty’s missing finger is apparent. He was masterful, especially with all the close-ups of his hands, to hide it

Hoyt, John	TOS 16 The Menagerie Part 1 TOS 16 The Menagerie Part 2 The first of three “doctors” in the original series, followed by Paul Fix and then DeForest Kelley.
Hudec, M. Leigh	TOS 16 The Menagerie Part 1 TOS 16 The Menagerie Part 2 This was, of course, Majel Barrett’s actual name, Majel Leigh Hudec, playing the part of the first officer Number 1. Since this was the pilot for the series, the network told Roddenberry that having a woman in command was unbelievable, and they asked him to take her out and, while he was at it, get rid of the guy with the pointed ears. He saved one of the two (and married the other).

Paskey, Eddie Crewman TOS 25 This Side of Paradise
Lesley TOS 20 The Alternative Factor

Paskey was also William Shatner’s stand-in and stunt double. In most fight sequences, it was Paskey in the long shots, Shatner in the close-ups, except, of course, for TOS 05 The Enemy Within where they BOTH appeared fighting each other. Then it was all 'long shots' where they both are shown. So Paskey appeared in many episodes before TOS 25 This Side of Paradise, , but never with a credit. Clearly, it made sense to give him another role, as Mr. Leslie, since he was on-set a lot of the time.

In the third and final season of the original series, Bernard Widin became the Executive Producer. As such, he is often blamed for the cancellation of the series although there were many other factors, such as the 10PM Friday time slot.

You will note that most directors were hired for one or two episodes. The exceptions were Marc Daniels (5) who was a common director at Desilu, Joseph Pevney (5) and Vincent McEveety (3). Would like to hear why they were chosen for multiple episodes.

LIST OF MINI-STARs IN THE FIRST SEASON

Here’s a list of those actors that appeared regularly in Season One, sometimes you might not recognize them in different roles. Some of them played the same role for a few episodes. Do you think any of these should have been “regulars”?

NAME	EPISODE	CREDITS AND COMMENTS
David L. Ross	5	Mostly as Galloway, often unnamed.
Sean Kenny	4	DePaul. Of course, two episodes as Christopher Pike, made him unrecognizable
Hagan Beggs	3	Unnamed helmsman
Jim Goodwin	3	Lieutenant Farrell
Grant Woods	3	Kelowitz
B a r b a r a Baldavin	2	Angela

M i c h a e l Barrier	2	LaSalle
Bruce Hyde	2	Lieutenant Reily. "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen....ONE MORE TIME!"
Ed McCready	2	In one of these, Miri, as the tricycle boy-creature, he was totally unrecognizable
Eddie Paskey	2	Mr. Leslie, but also Shatner's stunt double and stand-in mostly uncredited.
J o h n Winston	2	Our Australian friend at the transporter. This role flowered in Season 2.

Some Observations About Star Trek – the Original Series (Season One)

by Steve Lampen

I was lucky enough to watch the original airing of the original Star Trek Series. I was an instant fan. The end of the third season was my first year at college and the 10 PM Friday timeslot was impossible for me, so I had to await syndication to see many of those final episodes. The last episode I had missed was “The Empath” which I finally saw in syndication years later. About that same time, years later, my brother saw a small notice in the Pink Section (movie and television section) of the San Francisco Chronicle for a ‘Star Trek Club’. I joined. We watched episodes and discussed the details. The club took the name “Star Trek Archives” and was run by Sandy Sarris and Chuck Weiss.

Having gone through all 79 episodes to create the list above and below, many questions and inconsistencies came back into my brain. Allow me to list some of them below. Perhaps many of the questions might be answered by others with a deeper knowledge of the series and its production and the staff that assembled it.

- In TOS 19 “Arena”, at the very end, Kirk is dirty and damaged, with ripped clothing. But when he appears on the bridge, a second later, he is clean and undamaged. Hmmm. The Metron must have washed him!
- In these days of computer-generated images (CGI) many decry the lack of sophistication of the original Star Trek. But one has to look at this from a 1966 point of view. First, they had to churn out an episode a week or so, no mean feat. That’s something like ten minutes per day of useable footage. And there are constant notes about how “low budget” the series was, and how their budget kept getting cut. Shatner says in one interview that an entire episode of the Original Series cost what the catering budget of a common TV episode would cost today. This meant that, even allowing for inflation, sets would be as simple as possible and the writer and director and staff were dependent on the ‘suspension of disbelief’ of the viewer, especially younger viewers. I am more amazed how a lot of these sets, props and special effects stand up to this day. For this reason, I am no big fan of those who try to “fix” these old problems with new technology. I am much more satisfied that a believable special effect was created out of duct tape and chewing gum than a fancy new computer. Which do you think requires more human ingenuity and creativity?
- I think there are errors that could have more easily been fixed, such as the end of some early episodes where Kirk turns to Spock, the Science Officer, and says “Warp Factor One” simply because they were too cheap to put someone in the Navigators chair. I call that a directorial error. Kirk could just as easily said “Warp Factor One, Mr. Sulu” even if Sulu were not in the shot and not in his chair and we fade out from there. It happened in later episodes.
- In the episode “Shore Leave” they describe the planet as being uninhabited by any animals. And yet, in the background of many shots are fences, paths, roads - even a sawed-off tree stump – which certainly would indicate the presence of intelligent life!

- It is curious that some credits were LARGE at the beginning, but these actors never turned in the regulars, such as Paul Carr (Lt. Lee Kelso) or Paul Fix (Dr. Piper) in the second pilot, TOS 2 “Where No Man Has Gone Before”. Clearly, DeForest Kelley became available and replaced Paul Fix. But there was only Sulu on the bridge as a regular unless you count Jim Goodwin (Lt. Farrell) who showed up in a few episodes, until the second season when Walter Koenig was cast as Lt. Pavel Chekov. So Paul Carr could have been regular bridge crew. The large credit seems to indicate the intent. What happened? There were others. The fact that John Megna, one of the child actors in “Miri”, has an enlarged credit at the end is a total mystery. Let me know if you know why.
- There are some plot pieces that inadvertently reveal how the episodes were produced. One of these is the final credit sequence in TOS 28 The City on the Edge of Forever. It is a shot of the Guardian of Tomorrow with wisps of smoke drifting inside what the crew called “the Donut”. On top of that, the crew transports back to the ship and then the credits, director, writer, producer are inserted. You will note that the smoke “freezes” for each of these effects or additions of text, revealing that these were all done on a single ‘frozen’ frame. Interesting.
- Equally interesting was the fact that DeForest Kelley (Dr. Leonard McCoy) appeared only in the back credits, as did Jimmy Doohan (Commander Montgomery Scott), listed only as ‘Scott’ not Lt. Cmdr. Scott, or Scotty or any name that we would recognize. In publicity photos, it was clearly Kirk-Spock-McCoy and in many of those photos, Kirk-Spock-McCoy-Scotty, but this was never reflected in the credits. And I am sure it was also not reflected in their respective salaries! McCoy soon graduated to single screen credit starting in TOS 22 Return of the Archons. Sulu (George Takei) and Uhura (Nichelle Nichols) never seemed to make that jump from “also starring” to “star”.

- And now I must share one of my greatest sacrileges. I believe that Jeffrey Hunter would have made a much better Captain than William Shatner. Jeff was an actor's actor with a lot of major film work under his belt. I think his performance in "The Cage" (the first and unbroadcast pilot) was excellent. His untimely death on May 27, 1969 almost coincided with the last episode of the original series, "Turnabout Intruder", which was aired on June 3, 1969. Since episodes were filmed many months in advance, his untimely, and still mysterious, death might have had no effect. Certainly, Jeff Hunter's wife, Emily, was totally dismissive of his working in television since, as she told Roddenberry, "My husband is a MOVIE STAR." This would have made life difficult for everyone, especially her husband.
- Much has been written about Number One (M. Leigh Hudec, Majel Barrett) the logical, unemotional first officer to Captain Christopher Pike in "The Cage" and Mr. Spock, the pointy-eared Vulcan. It is interesting to note that Roddenberry was told to drop them both. He folded both roles into Spock, making him the logical and unemotional character, and married Majel, who later showed up as Nurse Chapel, and many continuing roles in following movies and TV series. She also did many of the female voices, such as the computer. She was the counter-part to Jimmy Doohan who was the voice dubber for many characters, computers and other roles.
- Some errors were simply communication errors. In "The Conscience of the King" the colony/star referred to is Benicia, pronounced BEN-EESHA. People in California will also recognize this as a small town northeast of San Francisco which, for three months in 1853-54, was the state capital. Without guidance from the writer (Barry Trivers), one must assume that the Script Supervisor (George Rutter) came up with the pronunciation BEN-A-SEE-YA. At least the incorrect version was consistently used seven times in the episode. Just check the pronunciation with Google or YouTube, or any astronomy textbook, if you don't believe me.
- Can anyone explain to me why Kirk would characterize Trelane TOS 18 The Squire of Gothos as a "God of War"? If that's just a joke, I don't get it. "Non-corporeal juvenile super-being" would be more like it. Many have suggested that this was Q for the Next Generation Star Trek Series. Certainly fits. Casting Director Joe D'Agosta stuck his neck out on this episode by casting William Campbell in the role of Trelane. Campbell. Was a New Herey kid, Inow mostly for gangster and other "heavies" role. Funny, he ended up as a perennial Klingon "heavy" for the rest of the Star Trek franchise

- I think "The Conscience of the King" also missed a great opportunity to use an existing unusual character trait to further the plot of this episode. The unused character is Scotty (James Doohan). In his episode listing above, I mention, and show a photo of, Jimmy Doohan's "missing finger" (second finger on his right hand). He cleverly hid this loss despite the fact he had more close-ups of his hands than any other actor in the series. Imagine that he had been also cast as the third witness to Kodos the Executioner (instead of Bruce Hyde as "Kevin Riley"), and when he talked to Kirk about his memories, Scotty could have held up his right hand as proof that he carried that memory with him always. It would have been a shocking and memorable part of that script. It would have added complexity to the character of Scotty. It is equally clear why we never see Scotty giving a Vulcan salute !
- A lot of anti-trekkies decry the latex and fake-fur monsters used throughout the series. Some are truly embarrassing, My vote for the worst is the giant ape man in TOS 14 The Galileo Seven. Mercifully, there is little screen time for him (her?) Then we have the Gorn, which can speak without moving his toothy lips in TOS 15 Arena. My vote for the best alien is the Horta in TOS 26 Devil in the Dark. Almost unrecognizable from the rock-world in which she lives. Spock's first-ever mind meld gives the creature what I can only describe as 'human' qualities.
- In TOS 15 Court Martial, Kirk makes the statement that the audio equipment on board can amplify an audio signal by "one to the fourth power". Any middle school student could tell you that one to the fourth power is ONE. Clearly they meant 10 to the fourth power (10^4) which is a gain of 10,000. I would suggest that a heartbeat, deep in the ship, would require a lot more than a gain of 10,000 to be audible. I would think that number should be more like 10^6 or a gain of 1,000,000. It should also be noted that TOS 15 Court Martial was not broadcast until after TOS 21 Tomorrow is Yesterday. The reason is quite obvious. TOS 16 The Menagerie (Part 1 and 2) also contained a court martial on the Enterprise. Two episodes back-to-back with the same general theme of a court setting with judges, would have been repetitive, so four episodes were put in-between them.

- If you're really interested in how the concept of Star Trek was developed and produced, check out the 1967 Star Trek Writer's Guide, written by Roddenberry https://www.bu.edu/clarion/guides/Star_Trek_Writers_Guide.pdf
- It is hard for me to pick out a "favorite episode" from the Original Series, so allow me to nominate my Top Five, in no particular order
 - "Amok Time" TOS 30. Great story by Isaac Azimov. Celia Lovsky as T'pau is fantastic. Great set built for Vulcan. By the way, if you ever get a chance to see this episode projected in 35mm or 16mm actual film, you can see the top of the red cyclorama (curtain at the back of the set, the red "sky of Vulcan"). When broadcast, the aspect ratio (width to height) of the picture is different, so video cuts it off. Great twist ending if you've never seen it. My favorite scene is where Spock pounds the communication station like it is made of putty.
 - "The Doomsday Machine". William Windom might give the best acting in the entire original series.
 - "City on the Edge of Forever" not enough science in this episode for me, mostly drama. But Harlan Ellison is a first-class writer. Can see why this episode won an Emmy. Another great twist ending.
 - "Devil in the Dark". A real lesson for kids about not fearing what you don't understand. Spock's mind-melding with the Horta is classic Star Trek. This made the Vulcan mind-meld a required plot piece for all following episodes, series and movies

- “The Menagerie” Part 1 and 2. Well, I love “The Cage” and without this two-parter we would have known little or nothing about it. I can’t believe that the color version of this original pilot was destroyed by Desilu or Paramount. Anyone know the story behind that? The production values of “The Cage” put the rest of the series to shame. It’s easy to see why this was the most expensive pilot ever produced up to its time. Did you know that, in “The Cage”, the voice of the Keeper (Meg Wyllie) was originally overdubbed by Malachi Throne? And nobody noticed this until they began shooting the “envelope” scenes which turned “The Cage” into TOS 16 Part 1 and 2 “The Menagerie”. By some amazing coincidence, that envelope footage starred Malachi Throne. So all the Keeper’s lines had to be dubbed again! If only they had hired some other actor than Throne, they would have saved days of work. (And this two-parter barely got done before it was aired!) Amazingly, when they cut the preview trailer for “The Menagerie Part 2” someone forgot to tell the editor about this change and the original deep dubbed voice of the Keeper is still that of Malachi Throne. Too late, I guess! The real question is, who did the voice over the Keeper (Meg Wyllie)? Does anyone know? For that matter, can you tell it’s the same voice? (Spoiler alert!) Since Throne turns out to be an image produced by the Keeper, maybe they SHOULD have had the same voice!
